Private schooling myth debunked
Children who attend private primary schools don't perform any better in NAPLAN tests than their peers at public schools, new research shows.

It was the children of a healthy birth weight, who grew up in higher socio-economic circumstances in homes filled with books and had mothers who didn't work long hours who performed best at NAPLAN.

The study authors said their findings, to be presented at a conference next month, debunked conventional wisdom that “private schooling enables children to achieve better academic results”.

"We found that NAPLAN test scores … of students from Catholic and other private schools did not statistically differ from those in public schools," the authors said.

“Our finding seems to suggest that 'nature' provides a more consistent role than 'nurture' at affecting children's cognitive outcome in this young age group.”

For the study, the University of Queensland researchers matched the 2008 and 2010 NAPLAN results of 15,000 year 5 students and 11,000 year 3 students with data from a long-term study of children tracking children from age four. COSIMA MARRINER

PY – 2 News
We have been practising retelling narratives during English time. Students are developing the skills to express themselves with descriptive and interesting language. During math we have been working on number facts and Year 1 and 2 have been doing 2 and 3 digit addition with and without regrouping. We have been learning about push and pull during science time. It was great fun making little parachute men and experimenting with these.

Sharing Time rosters were sent home this week. Our first topic is about being healthy and links to our current learning in HPE.

We have been completing some standardised assessment for reading and math over the past week. We look forward to tracking how each student has progressed to help inform future programs and learning.

This Friday will be our first pre-prep session for Term 4. We look forward to our pre-preps joining us over the term.

Enjoy the remainder of the week.

2 – 7 NEWS
The upper school students are beginning to plan a comic strip for the end of unit assessment. Some have excellent ideas for their dilemma and the characters they will create to solve the problem. The comic strip will be a computer presentation. The middle school students are preparing for their assessment after listening to a variety of eBooks.
In Mathematics the senior students have continued studying different forms of graphs. Later in the week they will be learning about 24 hour time and time zones in Australia. Mrs Booth’s class have been learning about probability. They have made spinners and made predictions on which colour they would land.

In Science students have continued their study of forces. Last week they were given the end of unit assessment task. Most students will need to collect a variety of things to enable them to complete their project.

In SOSE all students have been involved in research.
